Short-term surgical complications of third molar removal in relation to patient factors: a systematic review. To perform a systematic review of the literature on the effect of patient factors, such as age, gender and body mass index, on surgical complications of the removal of impacted mandibular third molars. Seven electronic databases were searched (Embase, Medline, CINAHL, PubMed, AMED, Biosis and Web of Science). A meta-analysis could not be performed, because of methodological heterogeneity and limitations of the data. A comprehensive systematic review of the literature was performed. A total of 60 studies fulfilled the inclusion criteria. The total number of patients included was 17,842. Twenty-eight studies reported the complications in relation to patient factors. Nineteen of these studies found a statistically significant association between the surgical complications and one or more patient factor, while 9 found no such association. Eleven studies found an association between age and surgical complications. Six studies found an association between the gender of the patient and surgical complications. The data quality was poor, and further prospective studies with more homogenous groups of patients and outcome measures are needed.

g or sabbath. It's a special night. On Saturday night we have a traditional Succos seder. We eat things like charoset, not to be confused with the charoset you see in the commercials for the most disgusting things you can eat. The charoset, which is symbolic of the mortar used to build the Jerusalem Temple, is a mixture of egg, fruit and nuts. In some ways it's sort of like the Passover meal, a mixture of Passover foods—what you should or shouldn't eat. At the seder, some people might talk about getting rid of the charoset, which is a metaphor for the bit of land that was taken from Israel, but maybe there was no charoset at that first seder in the desert. “Most people celebrate Passover, but most people are not Jewish. Jews are a minority of the world's 1.5 billion Christians and 1.2 billion Muslims. So it's important to me to be a Jew. We are people of the book. But we are also people who have been persecuted. We are people who have been abused and mistreated and pushed around. Our people have been pushed around for many years.” Miller, who is a substitute teacher
