In an interview with Axios, Trump said he had called Trudeau and "spent 20 minutes talking about trade" during which "he told me that he would be the first to rip up the deal if I don't approve it." "And just maybe," Trump said, "the relationship can start to heal." Yet the Trudeau comments could really go nowhere. Trump's trade policy has been criticized for undermining the WTO and the TPP was originally negotiated under President Barack Obama and won passage in Congress under his administration. Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., called for Congress to pass a resolution reaffirming support for the TPP in the wake of the Trump announcement. In Congress, it has to be approved by the House and Senate, which are controlled by Republicans. In the Senate, it would need 60 votes and support from 10 Republicans. The House is more difficult. But if the House approves it, Republican leaders would be loathe to deny a quick Senate vote. The House has already passed the resolution, which is currently sitting on Trump's desk. Yet Senate Republicans appear to be in no hurry to put on the vote. Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., told The New York Times that he was in no hurry for the Senate to vote on the resolution. "If I'm the president of the United States, I'm not going to rip up a deal that's been agreed to by the Congress, c6a93da74d
